Category:Music hardwareQ: C#: How to show rich text boxes in a listbox In my program, I have two rich text boxes that I need to be able to read from and write to. I was wondering how to get these boxes into a list box so that they are added and removed from it as needed. A: It's a little "hacky," but it will work for your purposes. Note that any information entered into a control will be lost if you do this. Add an event to your ListBox. private void

listBox1_SelectionChanged(object sender, SelectionChangedEventArgs e) { if (listBox1.SelectedItem!=
null) { richTextBox1.Text =

---

```
((ListBoxItem)listBox1.SelectedItem).Content.ToString();
        richTextBox2.Text =
((ListBoxItem)listBox1.SelectedItem).Content.ToString(); }

} When you click on a list box item, it will be selected, and the Text property on the first rich text box will change.

Mechanism and implication of host response in acute mucosal inflammation of the oral cavity. The local manifestations of inflammation in the oral cavity are increasingly recognized as an important source of systemic disease. However, the mechanisms of host reaction in oral diseases are not fully understood. The purpose of this study was to investigate the host response in the oral cavity in acute mucosal inflammation. Two types of experiment were performed. Acute inflammatory reaction was induced by topical application of hydrochloric acid. The induction was rapid, high and with the total epithelial detachment. The local infiltrating cell subsets revealed a marked increase in CD18/CD3 and CD4+ cells. The systemic host response to infection was observed in oral cancer patients and associated with substantial mediator production in saliva. Saliva from these patients had elevated amounts of pro-inflammatory cytokines IL-6 and TNF-alpha, and the levels were correlated with increased levels of cytokeratin polypeptides
