Mike Lee of Utah finds himself in an odd spot. The senator is an eternal optimist. A member of the pro-market and libertarian Republican Study Committee, he doesn't come across as someone who would advocate for any additional taxes. So he was perplexed to hear a fellow member, Senate Finance Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch of Utah, talk about the need to raise the federal tax burden. "When you're talking about this issue, you've got to talk about the fact that we're broke and we've got to make choices," Hatch said in an interview on Monday. "People aren't going to be as willing to spend their money if they know that their money's going to go to support these huge deficits that are incurred by borrowing." It would be a hard sell in Utah, a state that is generally politically conservative and has a history of fiscal restraint. But Hatch, who has been helping lead the drive to raise the federal tax burden, says he won't let the state's political makeup get in the way. "I'm an optimist, I love to be optimistic," Hatch said. "I've said, 'It doesn't matter how we balance the budget, it only matters how much we spend.'" Hatch has been pushing the Republican leadership to make $60 billion in spending cuts by Aug. 1 to balance the budget over a decade. But it's Republicans in the House that have been most open to boosting taxes and canceling some of those cuts. Lee has been in the vanguard of those who want to curb spending, including proposing his own budget cuts and calling for substantial cuts in the Medicaid program. It's unclear what approach Lee will take in advocating for such spending cuts. He says the answer is simple: Give people 3da54e8ca3
