Q: How to fill sub polygons correctly? i want to fill in a area of the globe selected in java with (suitable) ambient lighting using AGS. With some light cardigan, with much less light and outside of the sphere in another texture I'm managing to fill two polygons in a sphere of which the one is on the spherical surface and the other is slightly below it. The problem is that both textures are very different in size, otherwise the combined result would be perfect (yeah if only if!). The trick with this solution I found (not really I found it) is to use the camera projection coordinates as is. Nothing in the documentation either for the new shaders in AGS4 describes how to do that, which worries me. Is it even possible? Anyone here that can help me out? A: You can use the AGS4 function G4MbrFace to set the shading of the Mbr you want to use as a shader. This sphere is created with the following code: in vec3 position in vec3 normal out vec3 positionn out vec3 normaln void main(){ gl_Position = G4GLMbrPosition(G4GLMbrPosition(position, normal), G4GLMbrNormal); gl_Positionn = G4GLM

Description: For Advanced Dungeons & Dragons Monster Vault, characters use a set of attributes to determine their ability scores, equipment, and magical powers. Players calculate their character's ability scores (called attributes) by answering several questions about the player character. This is done after the character's background and other information are chosen. Then, the character's equipment and magical powers are chosen, based on the player's calculated ability scores. The Advanced Dungeons & Dragons Monster Vault is an expansion that contains all the previously published rules for Dungeons & Dragons 3rd edition. It also contains rules
