Discussion in 'Hyrule Warriors' started by Dark God Punishment, Sep 05, 2015.Badger Flat Badger Flat is a flat at the top of Geyser Hill. It contains two bubbling springs, named the North Steam and the South Steam, that are visible from Geyser Hill. During the summer, the North Steam has a steam plume of up to high. History In 1868, geologist Ferdinand V. Hayden reported that geysers called Mazama and Hackberry, (sic) were active at Badger Flat. When we heard that Stanley Warhola, the singer/songwriter in our band, had recently married — the first openly transgendered person to walk down the aisle in the U.S.A. in almost 30 years — we had to re-think our style. It was important for Mr. Warhola to be wed in front of the trans community. Ladies and gentlemen have come a long way since the early 70’s, and yet, we still haven’t gotten rid of the “I” in front of “it,” or the “them” that acknowledges the fact that gender doesn’t have to be binary. Mr. Warhola is walking side-by-side with a man — who would have been much more the object of woman’s affection...and perhaps less harassed with assumptions. Have you been to a wedding in Red Tinfoil? Well, we just had one. We took our red tinfoil hat and our gay flags and sat down on the pews with the couple to sing and dance and eat a meal, and afterwards, we took our American flags and our kazoos and got together in the sand dunes, with the county constable with us, for some serious boot stomping of the sand and blowing of the kazoos! Field of the Invention The invention relates to a method of fracturing a terranean formation which produces hydrocarbons and in particular, an improved method of fracturing a formation in which the wellbore is drilled to provide a contoured cross section. 2. Setting of the condition When a well is drilled, it is drilled so that it penetrates a terranean formation. The drilling of the well has produced a wellbore which may be called the "drill-hole". A condition of equilibrium is established whereby as production is obtained from the wellbore, formation pressure is exerted downward and in opposition to the net upward force of the fluid withdrawal from the wellbore. If the equilibrium condition is not soon reestablished, or if the production is greater than formation pressure, that is, an excessive amount of fluid is being removed from the formation, the wellbore is collapsed. The wellbore is collapsed if it has been drilled excessively narrow in diameter. More importantly, the wellbore is collapsed, or overbalanced, if it is drilled with no regard to casing, and thus some pressure or fluid is expelled from the formation to cause the formation to collapse before adequate pressure exists in the wellbore because of the inadequate casing. The collapse of the formation prior to obtaining a tension condition in the wellbore during fluid withdrawal from the wellbore is called "fracturing". During the wellbore formation drilling, it is desirable to control the rate of penetration of the drilling fluid. The ratio of penetration to the drill rate is termed "pitch", and the ratio of the insertion rate to the rate of penetration will control the drilling "pitch". The rate of penetration, however, is dependent upon the diameter of the passageway on the wellbore. In a conventional wellbore, the fluid withdrawal rate from the
