Polycystic ovaries (PCO) are one of the common signs of polycystic ovary syndrome (PCOS). PCO often occurs in androgen-secreting small ovarian cysts that are a common hallmark of PCOS. PCO may also occur in larger ovarian cysts, mostly in type I cysts. These cysts are not androgen-secreting, nor cause hyperandrogenism, however, they are still associated with PCOS. PCO is not specific to PCOS, and the clinicopathological characteristics of PCO in PCOS and those in non-PCOS patients differ. This article focuses on the follicle-stimulating hormone (FSH) stimulation test, the diagnostic criteria for polycystic ovaries, the clinicopathological characteristics of PCO in PCOS and non-PCOS, and the mechanism of PCO. The University of Salford's Principles and Ethics Committee has launched an investigation into a member of the University Council who made controversial comments about the Indian student demonstration and the alleged "rape culture" of British universities. In a widely-shared Facebook comment on Tuesday, the student body councillor, Aditi Kertavech, wrote: "The Indians were attacked because they are brown in a country where everyone is apparently entitled to be not brown." In a subsequent statement, the university's Students' Union said it was "deeply saddened" by the councillor's comment, which it described as "utterly offensive and racist". The Union's statement continued: "The students' union unequivocally condemns such views. We have been liaising with the University of Salford's staff and student representatives as we understand their views on the issue. We have also engaged in a dialogue with the council." It said that no disciplinary action had been taken against the councillor. In a subsequent statement, the university's Vice-Chancellor
