Cheap Car Insurance With No Deposit List Of Affordable Auto Insurance Companies 4.3.3 - Critical reception Common Sense Media critic Alan Sepinwall panned the series, writing that the episodes "feel at times like five different shows stuffed together; when not worse, they're not much better than the awkwardly frustrating portrayal of the child's life in some made-for-TV movies.... The plot of “The View from Space” is simple: a child tries to kill himself, or possibly several children, in an effort to salvage his classroom project. The way the show deals with this premise becomes increasingly problematic, though, once it realizes it has to combine the viewpoint of a child with the perspective of a helicopter. Most of this is unintentional, though, and easy to spot. But the show does become increasingly brittle, and in the end, the results are messy." He later concluded: ""The View From Space” isn't as bad as some recent TV adaptations of books, but that's not saying a lot." Zach Blumenfeld of Xfinity gave the series a positive review, calling it "smart, fluid, adventurous, and ultimately mind-blowing". David Â½ M. Aziz of the Chicago Tribune gave the series three out of four stars, and wrote: "The series taps into all sorts of science fiction tropes, but it also reminds us that fantasy can come from reality, drawing in more than 50 years of the Apollo missions and the first lunar landing with familiar stories, shots and sequences of some of the most famous photographs in human history. It uses the phenomenon of gravity as a starting point, but then works its way into a warm, sometimes futuristic, view of a young child's life.... The overall tone of the series is warm and humane. It lets parents get a little buzz from all the sci-fi-y moments, but it never forgets that it's mostly a coming-of-age story, no matter how deep those astronauts go." Brady Â½ Mike of IGN gave the series 7.0 out of 10, and wrote, "Maybe "The View From Space" is too long, and maybe it could have been edited down a bit. The problem with "The View From Space" is that there are way too many loose ends and no resolution to any of them. While "The View From Space" has some very interesting characters and good acting, the story line feels unfocused, and the resolution to e79caf774b
