You play as an otaku who develops a strange habit of withdrawing from society. One day, when you go to an Internet cafe you meet an anonymous user who's developing a waifu simulator. He provides you with instructions on how to play his waifu simulator game. His instructions never worked with the first games of the game's inventor, but as he provides instructions on how to play the game he provides a way to defeat the second version of his waifu simulator game, and finally escapes the game. The ending is good. What's In The Box

New Super Lucky's Tale Features Key:

- SingletonType (Type, String): Type of content that a content is a Singleton of. A content will always start looking for more content the first time it's accessed and hence will always start at SingletonType.Singleton. The only exception is when instantiating a new content, there is no way to link it up with any other players

First time a content is instantiated, it opens up an instance of the 'SingletonType' prefab. Type is the name of the prefab. Only the first instance of a content of the same type will be shared with other players

This variable is loaded from a Singleton prefab on the Unity Asset Store. You can find this key in the.txt file at the root of the Assets in the prefab of it.

Title (String): The title of the content

This is the title that the player will show upon accessing it in the list.

This is loaded from the object on the ClickTree prefab tree.

Description (String): The description of the content, including brand statement and decoration. Used when seeking content

This is loaded from the object on the ClickTree prefab tree. This value is used by the Player Services only to map content to their player instance (media player, web player, etc).

It's not used in any way during content creation. So no matter what you change, it will always be shown as the player's description for the content.

It's better to keep this clean as possible, keep only your project and product names.

Don't use product names like 'PornCat'

The value is always of type RichTextStringFormat.

Tuesday, April 3rd, 2013 Share this page Please login to vote Cosmetics: The Creeping Storm Our latest poll started with 1364 total votes cast (23% were devs), which was taken to be the all time high. However, after we posted this, a new poll was announced (624 total votes, 31% devs) and after a few weeks (409 total votes, 30% devs), the cup final was announced (365 total votes, 76% devs). It's a very interesting position in which an overwhelming majority of voters have set their expectations, hoping that the results will meet them. However, once they realize the results they are presented with something different, usually not an improvement, but a slight regression. This particular poll was not particularly notable when it was first released. You can wonder what caused such a small dip in votes, or perhaps your worth the time wondering what went wrong. What happened was I changed how votes were counted, essentially meaning that we will know about how big the margin is. Basically, there's a certain number of votes and you divide them by the size of the polling bucket (poll size is 100), usually presented as a percentage (number of votes divided by the total number). The votes up until a certain point are hardcoded into a bucket, and since you know the amount of votes in that bucket, you divide by the bucket size and then by the number of seats in your account (6). This takes off any hardcoded value from your projections (but that won't effect any other account unless I set the code differently). This is better because if you have many empty polls, it will take time to get votes to that bucket size, but it also means the results are fairly exact. If only the results were more accurate. Our poll is rather quick to start -- even the cup final, although the final week was especially quick. Sometimes we notice that people have gotten their results with just a couple polls. Right now there are 1363 votes cast for this poll, with a margin of 9.88%. I'll be surprised if we flip the vote by the time the polls closed. We will know more tomorrow. *Note: If you're logged in to a Steam account, you can vote once via Steam credentials. If you're logged in to another voting site account, you can vote once via that site (my vote was cast via my GRUB site). You can vote once per poll as long as the poll timeframe does not

COMMANDO A NIGHTMARE VIRUS:
"Time Commander" is a pre-historic time travel journey in a huge and futuristic military computer. It has been programmed by the world's top secret scientific institution; all of it has been designed to help humanity. In a near future, the computers have fallen. Everything is in ruins, and the staff has been scattered to the wind. A virus has taken control of the computer, which has been split into 9 "worlds", each representing a different time. You are the only person who can stop the worldwide time-warping crisis. You are the last hope for all that is human. 9 Worlds to explore, each in a different time and place: prehistoric, Roman, feudal Japan, Medieval, Conquistador, the Wild West, and the modern wars. A Deadly Virus: While all of civilization has been destroyed, the computer is still functioning. While you are walking down the time corridors, you will be offered more than 11 different weapons that are available for a specific world. You may notice that there is no feeling of progress from world to world. You are free to choose any world that you like and to explore its sectors. Your weapons might differ from sector to sector and you need to start at the beginning.

19 Time Levels: You are not limited in time levels. Try to get to the end of each world, each of which is 6 times bigger than the previous one. The more time levels you pass, the bigger the viruses get in size. The enemies in each world become stronger as well and more diversified. There are many different kinds of the enemies, ranging from Cannibals to Dolorians to Chaos Knights to even a Monster-like Man. There are also many different kinds of doors to open and many different objects to interact with. You can shoot the doors, but to open a specific door you need to interact with it. You will be able to meet these various people in game. A girl's head is in your hand even before you get to the first level of the game. Her name is Elsi. 11

Weapons: You have to start with the Katana, which has a slow and heavy attack. You can upgrade your Katana, so it becomes a fast and powerful weapon. There are also several other weapons, such as a slingshot, crossbow, pistols, laser guns and, most interestingly, the Time Commando, which is a gadget that allows you to travel through time at
