REQUIREMENTS For Windows PC: * Windows OS : Windows XP/Vista/7 * Adobe Flash Player : if you like your writing intense, difficult, and uncompromising—then you're in the right place. If you like your writing easy, easy, easy—then you've come to the wrong place. I have two novels in the works that I'm writing as free verse and they are both difficult to put into words. Hard to put sentences together and don't even know what I'm trying to say most of the time. I can only imagine if I tried to put my thoughts into a traditional form. I can't do it. I think this is something other than thinking I'm just not good with words. I've been following your blog for some time now and I think you are a fantastic writer. Most of the time. Maybe the time you are really good at writing a novel is not the same as writing reviews. I can write reviews but the novel which takes much longer seems to be just so frustrating. I feel I could be better and have more time to write, but I do think we should be kind and say so when we are short. Thoughts? I'm much more likely to read a book by a band I like than a book on a topic I'd like to read about. I love books about travel, but not for a long flight or a tough commute. So many of the books I buy for myself are novels. I do enjoy a history book, but history is one of those topics I could easily research. One that I'll have to research anyway. I don't see your point here - sorry, but all you've said is "I like to read about topics I'm interested in, but I'm not interested in the reading" - which hardly seems to invalidate your point or that of your list. And no, I don't consider it valid to try to draw general conclusions from my tastes in genre fiction and reviewing and my tastes in non-fiction. So my tastes in non-fiction are largely irrelevant to how I review books - I don't consider it my job to read about things to write about it. When I review a book, it's not because I'm obliged to. Even if the publisher makes me - and

What's new in Project Aura - Junior Colonist:

Our Team Anniversaries Just Keep Coming I was thrilled to celebrate our fifth anniversary with our team last week. I know of at least a few of you who have been with us for five years or more. I am certain that many of our team members will turn five this year. On our team's anniversary, we have a tradition of gathering for a team dinner, discussing what we have learned from the past year and looking forward to the next phase of our law firm's growth. Without further ado, let me share a few of the highlights of our fifth anniversary team dinner. Brett's Birthday My celebration took place with all of our lawyers and staff, at a hotel in Canton, Ohio. I had been thinking a lot about the intersection of excellence and contract law over the last year, and I wanted to continue exploring this topic when we celebrated our birthday. Under the theme of "Keep on Truckin'," I gave each lawyer a check for $10,000 (the amount of our firm's bonus pool for this last year). Then, as each person stood, I asked them to explain why they deserved the money. Brett stood up and explained how he had been working diligently to make the firm's billable hours more reasonable for our clients, while also being efficiently organized and thorough. After Brett described his efforts, I thanked him for his diligence and his hard work and presented the other members of our team with checks. Angela's turn. Angela talked about her efforts to work with our firm's clients to explain their options carefully, while also helping our clients to understand their legal rights. I thanked Angela for her work, but added that I particularly appreciated the story she had told me about a client who recently completed graduate school. Once she filled out our firm's quality assurance checklists, it turned out that this same student had marked all of our firm's files as "outstanding" without signing one of the checklists! After everyone's turn, I then got up and delivered the final presentation of the night. Brett and I had each driven a few hours to attend the dinner, and this was our first trip back to Ohio since we had joined our firm. Once I got up to speak, I reviewed the things that I thought we had done well during the five years that we have shared the team at our firm
