DCS World Edition game is based on the public licensed product of the same title, available at: How to use s:textfield tag I'm using s:property and s:textfield to create different label. I found the textfield, but I don't know how to use this tag. Could you help me? Here the code: Thanks a lot, A: The textfield is a specialized tag that can be used exclusively for text fields (see docs) The full list of s:elements can be found here Saturday, March 4, 2009 Epic Challenge - Marathon of the Masters Todd Gellerman is the master of the marathon. Last year he decided that 2009 would be the year he would finally win the race and with more than half of the miles already run he had the best chance. He had a professional trainer to help him develop a strategy for the race. I think it can be done. I think there are a few other great pros who can come close. The great unknown is if the pros can work together to get a better split. They did this in 2005 when they all ran well together. This race can't be won on strategy alone. 2 comments: Haven't followed the race on paper, but I've heard some good things. What does the bib color mean? I know you said no SPANKS, but couldn't you at least go out subscribe on observables when ngFor I have a list of objects on my component using ngFor and some variables public books = [{name: 1, value: 1},

{name: 2, value: 2}, {name: 3, value: 3}, {name: 4, value: 4}] I am trying to get the value of the variables when it changes using subscribe:

book.subscribe( (bookName: string) => {

console.log(bookName); }, (error) => {

console.log(error); }); I have looked at a previous post on stackoverflow and this seems like the right approach, so any ideas why it is not working? A: Just do a NgOnInit and pass the list: NgOnInit() { this.books = [{name: '1', value: 1}, {name: '2', value: 2}, {name: '3', value: 3}, {name: '4', value: 4}]; } Then you can subscribe to an observable: book.subscribe((bookName: string) => { console.log(bookName); }, (error) => { console.log(error); }); The Tip:

What's new:

NEW VERSION: Since the debut of the original Tacview Advanced last year, the Tacview Advanced Team has fixed nearly 40 bugs and added dozens of new features. The site has been vastly improved and can now be used on most devices. The Tacview site has three main areas: Current Attacks, ISR and the Latest. Right now, you can only view one of these three areas at a time, but you can change that in the Settings. Click the three dots to the right of the Featured Video and choose what you would like to view. Featured Videos is a great way to catch up on news or see what's going on in the world of ISR. Updates from the feed will flash on the top of the screen, as well as new videos and other items on the main page. The News tab has details about each update. One of the new features has been the three-dots menu on the top right corner. Use this to switch between the Current Attacks, ISR or Latest sections. Tacview, a new site offering combat shooting experiences through the magic of augmented reality, has partnered with Vyvance, a prescription-strength amphetamine, to help users remain alert and in touch with the challenges of high-speed actions. Tacview developed this partnership with the network of directors in the military and law enforcement who use the site as a part of their mission. Vyvanse came as a result of the company's commitment to supporting military veterans and first responders, who share a common focus on mission readiness and operational issues. "Vyvanse is a prescription drug used by those who have the greatest need to stay up on things," said Cho Seung Hwa, CEO of Tacview. "Some of our competitors in the AR space are concerned about the battle cycle of our military, understanding how these people are perceived, and there is a concern that we could fail because we have a military/first responder audience. Our audiences and visitors feel like they're part of our team and that they matter. We weren't looking to sell this medication because we believe it only adds to our value and our confidence in our mission." The partnership is a profound tie to the active duty and military, but the company also makes Vyvanse available to first responders who have similar concerns, as well as pilots, athletes, and anyone
