The 2007 version support only the new functionality introduced in. The 2005 version was available for Microsoft Windows. John F. Brennan could hardly even fake a good job interview Tuesday. But even his white-as-a-sheet face couldn't mask his stunned reaction when a reporter asked him if he had leaked the "unmasking" transcripts to the media. After acknowledging that he knew that his name was attached to these transcripts, Brennan responded that he did nothing wrong — and then told the Washington Post reporter, "Have a great day." See our accompanying story: CIA Director Leak — Leak Everywhere That was not enough for many of the reporters in the room — mainly at the New York Times, which posted details of the documents on its website — because other journalists have accused Brennan of wrongdoing. According to his critics, Brennan used his position as CIA director to sneak out information that he knew would embarrass the White House. "As the CIA's chief counterterrorism officer, I had an obligation to call the attention of the Department of Justice and the White House to concerns I had regarding the National Security Agency's bulk telephone records collection program. That is what I did. I did so on my own volition. I did not do so at the request of the White House. I had no reason to believe that the White House had been or would be given access to the CIA reporting that I brought to the attention of the White House. Indeed, this program was initiated on the President's direct orders to me." — John Brennan. Does Brennan have some kind of thing against the White House? This is a pretty good hint: There is no evidence that this has anything to do with the White House, according to the New York Times. Look: [email protected] But the only people who actually know if Brennan leaked this information are him and his aides. And let's not forget the fact that Brennan leaked to The Wall Street Journal all the information about U.S. drone strikes. Brennan admitted on Wednesday that he leaked information to two newspapers — and both of them lied about the leaks. Here's an excerpt from his interview with the New York Times: He added that he only shared the information to the Times with the express purpose of getting a response from the Obama administration, and he e79caf774b
