You can choose the identity strategy that you want to use. If you want to do a login through Facebook or Google, go to IdentityServer 4's documentation and start by the social example. If you need to perform a Token-based Authentication (e.g. a REST API), you can use it as a standalone.NET web application or integrate it into your existing ASP.NET MVC/Web API project. The disadvantage of IdentityServer is that it gives you a web application that, if you don't get it right the first time, is a pain to configure and maintain. We decided to build our own identity solution, specifically for fast development. It is called giilogram. Core Design: Giilogram's core design is 3 layers: Authentication Resource Managers State Managers Some of this design resembles what you would find in IdentityServer's documentation, or in a good implementation of IdentityServer. Most of what we mention below can be found there. It was chosen to build this layer ourselves, because we are used to building small applications, and it was our first larger application. Authentication We chose to implement authentication using IdentityServer 4, and authentication is easily configured. When connecting to the web application you would login using IdentityServer. If successful, you would receive a page showing you the username and groups of the user. On the client side the user is authenticated and you would get a token that represents the user's information. The token is used later to communicate the user's information to the server. Routes Once you have authenticated a user, you can redirect him to a requested resource on the server.

To be honest, it doesn't seem that suspicious, but it has the serial number. Q: How to express the idea "system or process of doing something" in Latin? In English one could say something like "the process of doing something" or "a system or process of doing something". How can I express this in Latin? My best guess would be: Per plures ad hoc utiles sive manens ad totum This sentence could be "For many different purposes or working toward something" A: "Utile quidem" is quite good; I would not add "ad hoc" or "manens" at all. "Manebare" is a good word for "ad hoc", too; "ab hoc... ad aliquid" (or "ab hoc... ad aliquam") works better for the more complicated case where you are talking about multiple things, but "ad hoc" or "ad hoc... aliquid" works for the other case. There is also the related adjective, "utile... ad aliquid"; this can work as a noun (see "utility", and "utile ad... ad aliquid") or as an adjective (see "utile vis"/"a utile") but that shouldn't give you any trouble. A: The word you're looking for is the sōtēs, a word borrowed from Greek, describing a process in the active voice. You can't use the preposition ad in it, but you might be able to use it with a multi-word (and somewhat stilted) phrase like "ad hoc" or "ad personam", which can mean "for a particular purpose." For the English phrase "system or process of doing something," I would translate it into the Latin senatus ordinatus or senatus processus, where senatus is the ablative plural of senex, meaning both "senior" and "old person." The word senatus ordinatus has several advantages over senatus processus. First, it's a much more natural word in the active voice. Second, it can be used in a wider range of cases than senatus processus. Here are some examples: "Pour les supplices de nos parents, etant de naissance plus jeunes que nous", "For the chagrin and torments of our parents,
