Brexit highlights UK's international potential According to a recent report, United Kingdom has much more potential than expected in becoming a global business centre. The report argues that UK has an advantage over other countries, as it will be easily accessible to more international investors, due to its incredible diversity. Norton Rose Fulbright strategist Arnaud Tjoutjian points out that when people often talk about the UK as a global business centre, they are usually referring to the financial services sector. That is partly true, but it is important to know that the biggest source of potential is the "closest to the core", as the phrase is used in the business centre discourse. For example, Tjoutjian says that the UK has a significant advantage when competing for overseas businesses and talent: its managerial, legal, business service and technical skills are second to none, because of England's long-standing tradition of excellence in business. He also points out that any shortage of talent in the UK will be instantly compensated for due to the country's vast and
