AdobeÃ .Q: Entity Framework 4.1 causes database to crash Just upgraded to Entity Framework 4.1 and now the database crashes after a few seconds. I've tried some different configurations of breaking the migrations and using database initializers for new tables created, but still, after a few minutes of usage, the database is unusable. I've got a WinForms app, so it has a DataSet and an objectcontext. The data context is very basic, it only has an object-mapping to the database with an incrementing id. In my data context I have just: using (var context = new MyDataContext()) { context.ObjectStateManager.Detach("tblMyTable"); context.SaveChanges(); } There are no other relationships between tables. I'm also not using the generic version of the ObjectSet. When it breaks, after a few seconds, I can open the database in SQL Server Management Studio and examine the tables and data. Their data is stored correctly and I can also make changes using SQL. It appears like the table is not being saved, but then the database itself crashes. I also used "Enable SQL Logging" and checked the error logs. I found an error for every request, like this (some of the line numbers are off, because I had to correct the code): 2008-11-04 16:44:13.0346
