As expected, the number of connected pores falls off rapidly as a function of the size of the pores. The smallest connected pores are on the order of magnitude of 5 μm in size (around 40 pores). The largest connected pores are on the order of magnitude of 50 μm in size (on average about 25 pores). The width of the distribution is about 10 μm , which corresponds to the resolution of the tomography, confirming that the estimates obtained from the 3D-RPNM are representative. Figure 8 a and 8 b illustrates that the relative magnitude of fluctuations in both the tissue volume fraction and specific surface area fall approximately inversely proportional to the square root of the ROI volume ($\propto \sqrt{V_{ROI}}$), for the sufficiently large ROI size (in comparison to the characteristic lengthscale of the pore space). n.a. indicates the technique is not applicable (see discussion in the electronic supplementary material, S6). Figure 9 a and 9 b illustrates that the relative magnitude of fluctuations in both the tissue volume fraction and specific surface area fall approximately inversely proportional to the square root of the ROI volume ($\propto \sqrt{V_{ROI}}$), for the sufficiently large ROI size (compared to the characteristic lengthscale of the pore space). n.a. indicates the technique is not applicable (see discussion in the electronic supplementary material, S6). 5ec8ef588b
